

Why Wolves Howl

By Ian

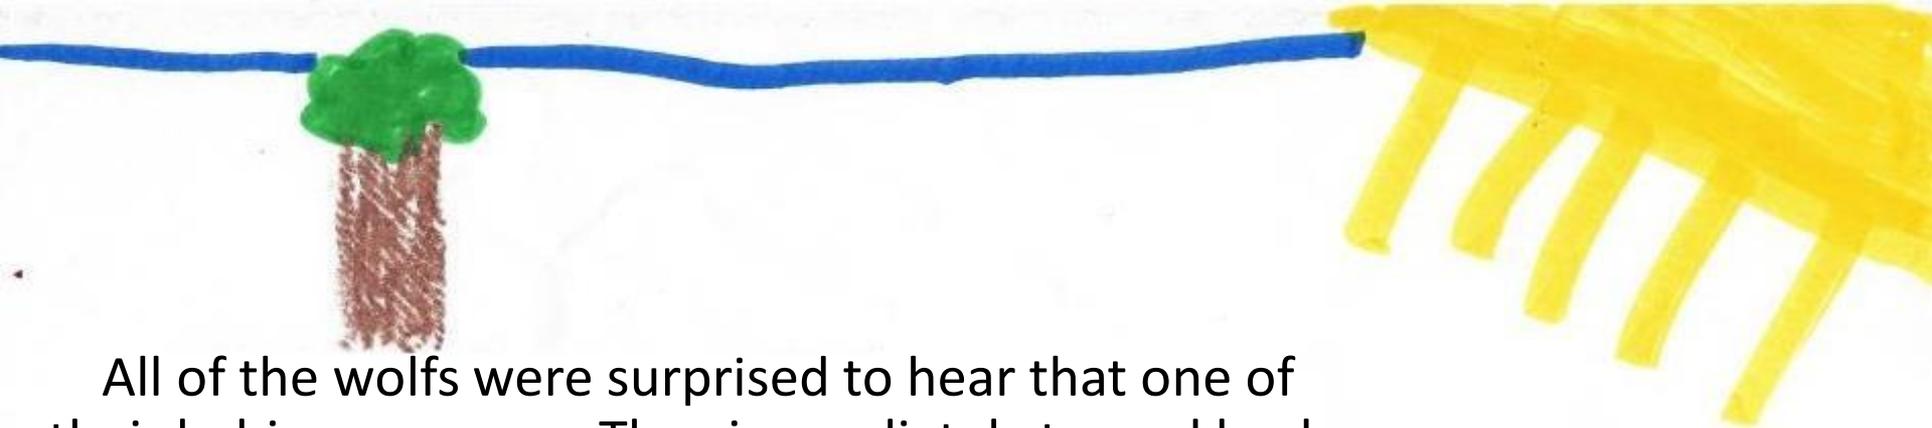

5 minutes later...

At first Wolves never howled. They only had conversations close to each other. Then one day, when the leader of the pack said, "We're moving on."

One of the babies stayed for another 5 minutes and curiously wandered the wrong way into woods. After a while one of the packs Moms noticed that their was only five babies instead of six.

She exclaimed, "We are missing one of the pups!"

All of the wolves were surprised to hear that one of their babies was gone. They immediately turned back and zoomed into the forest. On their way, the pack leader bumped into bear and asked him, “Where did Wolf go”.

Now this particular bear was very sneaky so he replied, “Go 30 steps north and 100 steps west”.

So the pack did what bear said. They walked 30 steps north and 100 steps west which put them in a ditch.

They started crying like little pups in a dark forest.

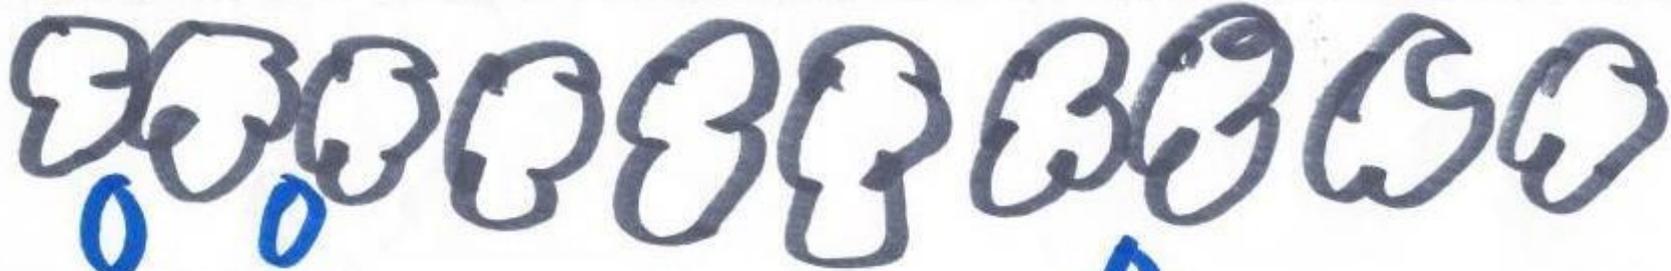

Nearby a tree heard all the commotion and asked, "What's wrong".

"Well bear tricked us. That's how got in this ditch" explained another of the packs Moms.

The tree muttered quietly to himself something about bear, but the wolves didn't bother to ask. After that, the tree said "Go 50 feet right and 70 feet left. Then go another foot right and 9 feet left."

So they followed the directions and found the wolf pup.

The wolf pup was so happy to see them she jumped like crazy. They made the journey back without running into anyone.

The alpha wolf spoke to the pack, "We have a problem because we lost one of our babies and can't have that happen again. I thought of an idea to solve this. We should howl to communicate to each other far away."

The pack practiced for the next three days and it worked.

At last, two days later another pup wandered. The leader howled and the pup came right back. From then on wolves howled.
